Gross Official Reserves Declined by USD1.2bn MoM to USD35.5bn in March 2023

The CBN's most recent data on foreign reserves show that Nigeria's gross external reserves declined by almost - USD1.2bn m/m to USD35.5bn as at 31 Mar '23. The m/m reduction is one of the sharpest in recent months and compares unfavourably with a decrease of c.-USD317m in Feb '23. Nigeria's external reserves have not been this low since mid-September 2021, making this a 19-month low. Although the reserves have been under pressure due to rising demand from various categories of fx end-users, we believe its significant decrease in March was primarily due to debt-service payments which typically peak in the first quarter of the year. Total reserves as at end-Mar '23 covered 7.0 months of merchandise imports on the basis of the balance of payments for the 12 months to Sep '22 and 5.4 months when we add services. However, for a more accurate picture, we must adjust the gross reserve figure (and the import cover) for the pipeline of delayed external payments. In contrast to Nigeria, official reserves for South Africa and Egypt, the two other markets that we track in Africa increased during the month. More specifically, South Africa's International liquidity position, a more comparable figure to Nigeria's gross external reserves, increased by USD1.1bn during the month to USD55.2bn, mostly due to a rise in gold prices, and other asset price movements. Additionally, Egypt's foreign exchange reserves rose by USD95m to USD34.4bn. This is true despite recent pressure on the country's foreign reserves and its local currency, the Egyptian pound, brought on by weaknesses in its balance of payments position. Turning back to Nigeria, the increased attrition of the gross external reserves is reflective of limited accretion to the external reserves from oil receipts and weak capital flows. Given dwindling oil revenue and weak capital flows, the only potential source of accretion to the reserves may be concessional loans from multilateral/bilateral sources. However, these often come with strict conditions. Indeed, the Federal Government (FG) anticipates that a portion of its 2023 fiscal deficit will be covered by multilateral/bilateral project-tied loans amounting to NGN1.8trn (USD8.3bn). Although the FG also projects foreign borrowing of an equivalent amount (NGN1.8trn), it is doubtful that this can be realised due to the tight financial market conditions.

Capital Market Summary .

Analysis of the market activity in the week ended May 05, 2023 shows that the Nigerian equity market closed on a bullish note for the second consecutive weeks. STOCK MARKET REPORT

Domestic Market Review

OUTLOOK AND STOCK RECOMMENDATION FOR THE WEEK (08/05/23-12/05/2023).

For the second consecutive week, The Nigerian Equities Market closed on positive performance. The listed equities market, NGXASI, recorded a gain of 0.12% W-o-W while the NASD OTC closed negative with a 0.57% loss W-o-W. The listed equities market, NGXASI, recorded a gain of 0.12% W-o-W as compared to a gain of 2.04% recorded last week. The Nigerian Exchange recorded N33.65b gain in naira terms. In Year-to-date, the NGXASI closed positive at close of the week with a gain of 2.37% as market capitalization settled at N28.57trn. The impressive first quarter results released by most of the blue chip companies coupled with low and attractive prices of these companies are impacting positively on the market. The market may likely continue to move upward during the week as investors may continue to take position on stocks that have declared impressive results and pay good dividend to investors. In the coming week, we expect the market to continue with the positive note as we expect more impressive first quarter results. We will continue to advise investors to trade only on fundamentally justified stocks as the weak macro economic environment remains a significant challenge for listed companies. In the light of the above we want to recommend the under listed stocks for purchase during the week. UCAP PLC, UBA PLC, MTNN PLC., ACCESS PLC, DANSUGAR plc, DANGOTE CEMENT PLC., WAPCO PLC , FLOUR MILLS and NASCON PLC .

The Equity Portfolio Model which closed the previous week at 7.16% appreciated during the week, and closed the week at 7.59% (YTD). This can be compared with NGX All Share Index which closed at 2.25% in the previous week, also appreciated during the week and closed at +2.37% {YTD}. The EPM appreciated during the week under review and over performed the All Share Index of the market. Some of the stocks that contributed positively are ZENITH, WAPCO, FLOUR MILLS and GTCO. Investors are thereby advised to take into consideration selection of stocks in diversified sectors to minimize risk, good dividend paying stocks and strong fundamentals to enhance the value of the portfolio. Key. Tcost means total cost of the transactions including charges (market price*units plus charges). Unit cost is total cost per unit of the stocks. B-E Price is break-even price i.e the price the portfolio will not record any gain or loss. Target price is the price we want to sell.

MARKET DEVELOPMENTS (LAST WEEK)

Access Holdings Subsidiary Receives Regulatory Approval from Central Bank of Angola to Acquire Majority Equity Stake In Angolan-Based Finibanco S.A. Further to its announcement on October 4, 2022, on the expansion plan to acquire a majority equity stake in Angolan-based Finibanco S.A., Access Holdings confirmed to the exchange during the week that “its flagship subsidiary, Access Bank Plc, has received regulatory approval from the Central Bank of Angola: Banco Nacional de Angola, for the acquisition of majority equity stake in Finibanco Angola S.A. The Central Bank of Nigeria had previously granted its approval to the Transaction and the Bank expects to receive the approval of the Angolan Competition Authority in the coming days, which would complete the requirements for regulatory approvals for the Transaction, enabling the Bank to initiate completion of other customary conditions precedents to close the Transaction. The Bank has also signed agreements with minority shareholders of Finibanco Angola of S.A. who have expressed an interest to sell their shares concurrently and targets to attain a total shareholding above 80% in Finibanco Angola S.A. at the completion of the Transaction. Commenting on the recent development, Dr. Herbert Wigwe, Group Chief Executive Officer, Access Holdings said: “We are pleased to be well-positioned to join the select league of banks providing high value financial services to high-growth businesses and the rising consumer sector in Angola. The Bank brings a lot of value-add and expertise that will act a positive catalyst to foster greater innovation and promote the deepening of the financial sector in Angola, while complementing our strategic growth objectives in the broader SADC region’.

How to Manage Short-term Naira

The year 2023, has been an exceptionally volatile year for Naira-denominated savers, with 1-year T-bill rates oscillating between 3.78% and 13.05% while Federal Government of Nigeria (FGN) bond rates have been more stable. To make things more complicated, 90-day deposit rates available to financial institutions (rates which they can pass onto their customers) have varied between 4.00% and 19.00%. The question, this year, has been not how to position a Naira fixed-income portfolio, i.e. whether to take short-dated T-bills or long-dated bonds, but when to buy high-yielding T-bill and short-term deposits. Complacent fund managers, who were not aware of the dynamics of the market and who locked in money at low rates, had a rude awakening by the end of Q1 and appear to have been confused by event. How does a canny investor make the best returns in these conditions? Note that average FGN bond rates have, for the most part, been higher than 1-year T-bill rates and 90-day deposit rates, so certain kinds of investor would have been happy with FGN bonds, and could have accessed them by buying Fixed Income mutual funds. But many investors either have a short time horizon or like to see their cash redeemed on a regular basis, and the key for them has been how to maximize returns on short-term fixed-income investments.

As all investors know, conditions were far from normal at the beginning of 2023. The Central Bank of Nigeria (CBN) was in the process of withdrawing old banknotes from the system and replacing them with new ones. Such changeovers are very rare, and the prospect of millions of Nigerians depositing a trillion or more old Naira banknotes with their banks was going to create unusual conditions, in this case, a surfeit of bank liquidity. And, as anyone who studies short-term movements in short-term rates knows, a surfeit in liquidity usually results in a fall in T-bill rates. Banks, engorged with their clients’ money in current accounts, were big bidders at the CBN’s T-bill auctions and rates fell during January, sustaining low levels during February and the early weeks of March. These were bad times to lock in a short-term investment.

If it was not clear that conditions were abnormal, then one only had to look at what was happening on the street. First, there was a shortage of cash as people took their banknotes to deposit with banks. At one point many shops stopped taking cash, fearful they would not have time to deposit it. Then long queues formed at ATMs, as people relying on cash waited, often for hours and sometime overnight, to get hold of precious new-issue banknotes. As the interbank system processed a high number of electronic transactions it began to show the strain, with people reporting multiple problems with card payments and electronic transfers.

Next, and following a judgment from the Supreme Court that ruled against the banknote replacement policy, the CBN instructed commercial banks to reissue the old banknotes. The queues at ATMs disappeared within a fortnight, and banks were faced with the task of emptying out customers’ current accounts and issuing them with banknotes again. Banks became much less liquid than they had been a few weeks earlier. This, not surprisingly, made them weak bidders at the T-bill auctions, systemic liquidity was lower than before, and 1-year T-bill rates shot back up in March.

Conclusion . To manage short-term Naira liquidity going forward, the key point, is to target a rate that one deems to be acceptable and not to deviate from it on the downside. A double-digit interest rate, in either 1-year T-bills or short-term deposits, seems to be a reasonable target, given that period of high liquidity has (e.g. during February) driven returns to below 5.0% annualized. One could be a little more ambitious than this, perhaps, and target 12.0% annualized. This, of course, is neither a precise nor an ambitious target, but a rule-of-thumb that would have worked well during the first four months of the year. Unless there is an overall rise in Naira-denominated market interest rates from the beginning of May onwards, this rule of thumb may work well over the coming months. A few months is about as far as one can project forwards, given the changing nature of policy and the fact that ministerial appointments in the new government may signal a change in fiscal direction fairly soon.

The overall argument for 2023 is that government borrowing is likely to have the effect of pushing market interest rates upwards. The issue here is how short-term liquidity drivers are going to influence short-term rates over the coming months. The last trading days of April saw a large redemption of FGN bonds, creating system-wide liquidity, but the timetable of T-bill and FGN bond redemptions is sparse going forward. Conditions of tight liquidity may well return and it may be possible to shift one’s target benchmark upwards. An ambitious investor might work with a 14.0% target.
